LEADING TECH EXECUTIVES FRAN DRAMIS AND TIM BUCKLEY TO JOIN VOYAGER CAPITAL ADVISORY BOARD

Former BellSouth CIO and Red Hat COO bring a combined five decades of IT management expertise, extensive networks to Voyager

SEATTLE – May 1, 2007 – Voyager Capital, a leading information technology venture firm, today announced that Francis “Fran” Dramis and Tim Buckley will join Voyager’s advisory board. Leveraging three decades of senior IT management at companies such as Bell South, AT&T, Bell Labs and Salomon Brothers, Dramis will advise the firm on opportunities in the datacenter, networking and software sectors, as well as assisting Voyager portfolio companies with customer relationships. Buckley, who brings over 20 years experience building startups into billion-dollar public companies and most recently served as Chief Operating Officer of Red Hat, will assist Voyager with growth strategies for its portfolio companies.

“We are thrilled to have business and technology industry executives of Fran and Tim’s caliber join our advisory board. Fran brings deep IT expertise from decades of experience in Fortune 100 companies and has strong relationships that will support Voyager’s investment activities, while Tim has driven the growth of several startups into successful global brands,” said Bill McAleer, managing director of Voyager Capital. “Our portfolio companies will greatly benefit from both Fran and Tim’s deep expertise and industry contacts.”

Dramis is the former Chief Information, E-Commerce and Security Officer for BellSouth Corp. Before joining BellSouth in 1998, Dramis worked with CIO Strategy Inc., an information technology consulting firm. Prior to that time, Dramis was managing director and CIO at Salomon Brothers. Dramis also served as president and CEO of Network Management, and president and COO of Telic Corp. Early in his career, Dramis worked with AT&T, including Bell Labs, rising to the position of executive director of information product management. Dramis served as director and chairman of the BellSouth Technology Group and served on the boards of the BellSouth Solutions Group and the BellSouth Foundation. He currently serves on the boards of Avocent Corporation and Web Methods.

“I look forward to working closely with Voyager to help identify and build world-class technology companies,” said Fran Dramis, former CIO of BellSouth. “I sit on numerous boards and have the opportunity to see many companies. I chose to work with Voyager because I believe the firm’s value-added approach makes a major difference for emerging technology companies. I am eager to lend my perspective and support to Voyager's portfolio as part of the firm's extended team."

Tim Buckley has spent his career developing startup companies into successful businesses and has held executive positions in sales and operations. Most recently from 1999 to 2003, Tim was the Chief Operating Officer for Red Hat, the world's premier open source and Linux provider. Prior to Red Hat, Tim was senior vice president of worldwide sales at Visio Corp., where he was involved in growing the company from a startup to a public company that was later acquired by Microsoft in 1999 for $1.3 billion. Prior to Visio, Tim held executive positions at Approach, a windows database company that was sold to Lotus Development Corp; Aldus, the company that pioneered Desktop Publishing software and went public before being sold to Adobe Corp.; and Decision Resources, a business graphics software company that was sold to Ashton Tate.

"Each of Voyager's investments in business software, wireless and digital media has the potential to become a market leader, and I'm thrilled to be able to lend my expertise building companies to their portfolio," said Tim Buckley, former COO of Red Hat. "I wanted to take the time to be an active part of Voyager's advisory board because I believe they have developed a unique go to market approach that helps to turn startups into global brands."
